Paul warned it is clear that there is a "tremendous amount of voter fraud" in Florida, and perhaps more states in this election cycle. He said that should his concerns prove correct, Florida's results should be thrown out. "I think there is a tremendous amount of voter fraud going on, and I know it is a huge problem in other states, and it is really, really dishonest, and I think it has destroyed democracy, and it is not a good thing for our country," he said. "If you look at the people that are bussed into the south -- in the middle of the night, to many states -- or they are paying people in cash to go to certain states and put certain names on the ballots, it will be a disaster," Paul added. "And so I think it is important that we investigate, and we're going to do everything we can to expose it, and then we should vote all the people on the ballot in." I'm building a simple game in Unity and I want to have a Sprite that can be duplicated, to be used in different parts of the game. The problem is that I want it to be a jpg. I've been trying to use FBX, but it doesn't seem to work. If there is any other better way of doing this, I'm all ears. A: Sure it is possible, you can do this by importing your sprite as an image and using an image component. So you are looking for something like this using UnityEngine; using System.Collections; public class Sprite : MonoBehaviour { public Texture2D image; void Start() { Image image = GetComponent(); Vector2 origin = image.rectTransform.position; Vector2 scale = Vector
