What's wrong with just using FileMaker Pro? Surely there is more features for a $97 upgrade than $2399? Great idea; isn't it? By publishing such an excellent price point I would predict one of two things - either many people will use it and it becomes so successful there will be an outcry, or it will flop. I think there's a bit more to it than that, and if you can find a way to get even more for the money, it's worth a try. Even if it fails, you've learned something about the market, which could help you later on. So I think the key is that you need to find a way to show that this is a simple, but good and useful product. Think about your competition - the tool you're offering might not have any (or many). You're right that this doesn't make any sense at all if you are a big company that will do everything internally (which is what I can't figure out, why someone would want this). However, if you are a small business that just wants an online database and simple billing, I think this will be a great solution. I agree with you. I see nothing that would make me want to get this, or recommend it to others. It's very pricey when you factor in that you can get a free FileMakerPro account and have a database that works, and then pay $80 for this App. The fact that the only thing that you can do with it is invoice doesn't make it worth the money. FileMakerPro + FC will cost around $50. And your database will work on all macs, PCs and iPad's. The only good thing I can see is that it will make it easier to upgrade to FileMaker Pro if you need to. You'll have a free version. My only reservation is that it only works in the US and Canada. Most of us can't figure out how to get a rick and I know that. My experience is that this product won't sell because of its price and lack of features. That's a shame, because it can be a great idea. I will add that you can get a FileMakerPro account for free if you are a student or instructor. I think this is a very good tool for the price. It's a nice to have tool for an e-commerce business. It is much cheaper than
