Farmland is among the top five major ecosystem types in the Pearl River Delta (PRD), which contributes ~50% of the total agricultural land. Accordingly, soil pollution with heavy metals has attracted much attention. The objectives of this study were to (1) investigate the soil heavy metal pollution status of 12 main grassland types and (2) assess the potential ecological risk of heavy metals in these types using the Nemerow method. The results showed that the content of total heavy metals (HMs) in soils of the study area was lower than that in soils of the study area except for soils of turf fields and grassland, but it was higher than or similar to that of soils of the study area. An overall mean content of HMs of grassland soil was found to be lower than in those of cropland soil. The potential ecological risk of soil of the study area was more severe in grassland soil than in cropland soil. Moreover, soil of the Zhijie and Zhongshan counties in the study area had a higher potential ecological risk than that of the other two counties. HMs had a greater contribution to potential ecological risk than did Fe, Cu, Zn, and Ni. In addition, correlation analysis suggested that the formation of potential ecological risk was affected by factors, including soil pH, soil organic carbon and total nitrogen, soil electric conductivity, topographic variables, and land use types.

Brief History of the Post Office

The Romans were the first to carry their letters by horseback across the British countryside. They also used stoneware inscriptions to get their mail to the right destination and this led to the introduction of the Roman “Reading Stamps” which were to be found in, or on, the stone or brick work of a house. From the Romans a vast, yet largely unknown, history was to come. This would change in the 11th century when the Saxon King Alfred the Great fought against the invading Danes. He defeated them and drove them back across the channel. This gave him an opportunity to strengthen his country's security and improve communications. Alfred had a court at Winchester where he governed his Kingdom. In the year 901, his King ba244e880a
