Category:Beta software Category:Microsoft websites Category:Microsoft software Category:Discontinued Microsoft softwareQ: DateTime default value in MS SQL Server Is there any way in SQL Server 2005/2008 to set default value to DateTime field (parameter)? I need to use DateTime property for the field but I do not want to set a default value of that specific instance of my table in the database (I do not want to set a default value for all my rows in that table in the database). I need something like mySql's default null value. A: You could create your own insert-statement, and have the default be NULL. On your insert, you could do something like this: INSERT INTO Table VALUES (value), (value), (value) --The table will only insert the value if the field is not null. If you are looking to ignore all default values: INSERT INTO Table VALUES (value) --The table will ignore all the field's default values. A: You could probably use NULL if you want to throw away any default value. So you could have a column with DATETIME DEFAULT NULL Then, you
