of the present invention pertain to telecommunication and computer networking, and pertain more particularly to the generation of power for a computer in a mobile system, such as a cellular telephone. Mobile systems, such as cellular telephone handsets, conventionally rely on battery packs to provide power to a variety of internal systems on the handset. Such systems include, for example, a radio frequency power amplifier, an oscillator, and various analog and digital circuits. In addition, some cell phone handsets offer a charging port to recharge the battery from an external power supply, such as from a wall outlet. In some mobile systems, there is a need to maintain battery status information to, for example, assist in discharging a battery or to avoid the short circuiting of the battery. For example, some cell phone systems, such as the Global System for Mobile communications (GSM), may employ a Self-Testing-of-Memory (STEM) feature, which is a battery testing feature that makes the battery operate under predetermined test conditions, either before or after a recharging operation. The battery operated under the test conditions may be required to retain its data and to pass the test. In these and other conventional systems, for example, battery status information, such as a battery voltage, may be output to a display device. However, conventional displays may consume more power than desired.

It is a simple trick to catch the user's IP address and redirect it to the customized website of your own. Most of the users believe that it is secure because the generated links are delivered to their websites within few seconds of creation. But it is not as the visitors receive the links from third party websites, which may be a threat to their personal security, as the hijackers might capture their passwords and other information. Therefore, we should use the built-in Proxy feature of Windows to avoid this problem. A proxy is a software or a third-party application that changes the IP address of your system so that the websites you are browsing are recognized on your system as originating from a different IP address. Sometimes, the proxies can be used to hide the real IP address of the system from the websites that you are browsing. Usually, HTTP proxies provide two major functions - to change the IP address of the system and to help you bypass the so-called "filtering" This is because many people believe that if they use a proxy, they are safe from any possible threats and other dangers. But it is not so - proxy is not a good thing for security if someone is able to capture the traffic on the proxy server and view the websites that you browse or capture the emails and the passwords of the people who make use of the proxy server. Windows Server 2012 provides a built-in proxy server that you can utilize to run websites that you do not want the people to see your IP address, or for your marketing purposes. This Proxy server is helpful in your daily browsing and provides you complete anonymity. You do not even need to change your router settings if you are making use of Windows server proxy because the proxy server will do the job for you and you can surf all the websites with the real IP address of your system. Here are the steps that you need to follow if you are going to install a proxy server on Windows: The next thing you need to do is to select the internet protocol version that you want to be used by the proxy server and the proxy server settings. If you are going to use the SOCKS version, then the settings should be done and you are all done for the proxy settings. If you are going to use the TCP version, then click on the TCP tab and then change the settings as shown in the image below. Here you need to specify the port number that the proxy server will listen. If

I created a new (empty) mongo database and ran mongod and configured it as described in the docs (including the "configure database" page) as mongod.conf. I would have expected it to run successfully, but I get the following error instead: I'm on a Mac Pro 3.1, OS X 10.9.1. A: Not sure what this has to do with the MongoDB server itself, but the other day I had a problem in a similar fashion, and this solved it: sudo chown mongod /usr/local/var/mongod sudo chmod o-w /usr/local/var/mongod

Fiber-optic oxygen sensor based on a conjugated polymer. The first opto-chemical sensor for the determination of oxygen has been constructed using the unique electrochemical properties of conjugated polymers to measure dissolved oxygen concentration. An electrochemical technique has been employed to interrogate the electrochemical response of the polymer, and a p-n junction diode detector has been used to convert the evanescent signal of the polymer into a stable electrical signal. An adequate response time of less than 1 s has been obtained by using an Hg(2+) lamp to excite the conjugated polymer.

Amperometric detection of the conjugated polymer with 20 mM H₂SO₄ at 0.5 mA/cm² gave a linear response to dissolved oxygen concentrations of 10-100 µM. The polymer was further characterized and the underlying electrochemical, spectroscopic, and chemical properties of the polymer studied. A steady-state current response was observed for extended times (>15 h) showing no signs of decay. It was also shown that the polymer can be cleaved into a F₂ fragment and a conj

Next Anti-Rohingya Campaign A group of Burmese bloggers, including well-known political activist, Sone Aung Linn, have published a series of leaked messages from the Burmese army, National Security Council and the Information Board warning the security apparatus about plans to carry out a nationwide crackdown against the Rohingya Muslim minority. The message, published at the blog A String of Pearls, is the most recent example of Burmese activists and civil society activists collaborating to verify sources of government information by allowing anonymous sources to post and solicit comments. Other sources of leaks have also been uncovered by The Irrawaddy,
